¹⁷ "The English language has been variously divided into periods by different writers. In the division now most commonly recognized, and adopted in this book, the first period dates from about 450 to 1150. This is the period of full inflection, and is called Anglo-Saxon, or, by many recent writers, Old English. The second period dates from about 1150 to 1550, and is usually called Middle English, or, by some, Old English. The last period, from about 1550, is called Modern English. Some make four main divisions: Anglo-Saxon, as above; Old English, from about 1150-1350; Middle English, from about 1350-1550; and Modern English, as above," cf. Webster's New International Dictionary of the English language, revised by W. T. Harris and F. Sturgis Allen, 1927 (includes a brief history of the English language by James Hadley, revised by Geo. Lyman Kittredge, p. XXI-XXXV); cf. also H. C. Wyld, A short history of English, London, 1914 (German translation by H. Mutschmann, Heidelberg, 1919, Indogermanische bibliothek, II. abt. 9. bd.). Libraries developing collections on the English language in its earlier periods may find the divisions PE 401-408, PE 451-458 useful either for actual classification of material or for shelf-list references.

²⁰ Church Slavic, the language of the early liturgical literature for the Slavic branches of the Greek Orthodox church (Bulgarian; Serbian; Russian). In its earliest known phase (Old Church Slavic) it was reduced to writing by Cyrilus (d. 869) and Methodius (d. 885). Old Church Slavic is substantially a Macedo-Bulgarian dialect, hence also known as Old Bulgarian. It was formerly believed to be a Slovenian dialect and in the earlier linguistic literature it is termed Palaeo-Slovenian (Old Slovenian), or "Pannonian," in the erroneous belief that the language originated in the region of ancient Pannonia. The gradual changes due to influence of the various vernacular languages—incipient in the oldest manuscripts (9th-11th cent.)—increase in course of time so that distinction is made of the Bulgarian Church Slavic, the Serbian Church-Slavic, and the Russian Church-Slavic. A fourth group (Bohemian-Church Slavic) is represented only in a few fragments, the "Prague fragments."

Here are classified treatises (grammars, dictionaries, etc.) dealing with Church Slavic in general as well as those restricted to Old Church Slavic. Treatises emphasizing the vernacular element may be classified with the respective languages and here represented by shelf-list references.

²¹ The literary language of the Serbians and Croats is identical, but the Serbians use as a rule the cyrillic alphabet, the Croats the roman. The name of the language varies: Illyrian (lingua illyrica), Slovinski or Slovenski; also regional names: Hrvatski; Dalmatian; Bosnian, etc. In the Yugoslav kingdom it is officially termed: Српско-Хрватски.

²³ Here are classified dictionaries professing to be either Serbian or Croatian with equivalents in any of the non-Slavic languages of Europe.

²⁴ No distinction is made between Serbian and Croatian.

²⁵ Here is classified:

(1) Serbo-Croatian literature, General; i. e. treatises on, and editions of, both Serbian and Croatian literary works.

(2) Serbian literature proper (cf. Note 22).

Libraries preferring to keep the Serbian literature apart may make use of the section PG (1500-1558). Works limited to Croatian literature are classified in PG 1600-1697. Libraries not making any specialty of Slavic literature may ignore the sections PG 1500-1697; cf. also PG 560-576 (Yugoslavic literature).

The original name of the people, Русины (Rusiny; Latin: Rutheni), adhered to the Ruthenian Slavs in the former Austro-Hungarian monarchy (Galicia; Bukovina, Hungary). It has now been abandoned generally in favor of Українці (Ukraintsy), the name adopted by the people in Russia.

For nearly all of the more important languages spoken in Europe special schemes for dialects have been made. See PC787-798, PC1701-1977, etc.

⁴ For Oriental languages substitute the following scheme for 195-199:

- Texts
- 195 General collections.
 - 196 Collections in museums and libraries.
 - 197 Minor or private collections.
 - 198 Translations.
 - 199 Individual texts.
